Head Of War Crimes Agency Admits He Was Nazi Himself

Erwin Schüle, a prosecutor who has supervised the tracking down of Nazi criminals in Germany since 1958, has admitted that he himself joined the Nazi party in 1937.

Mr. Schüle who is head of the Central Agency for the Uncovering of Nazi Crimes at Ludwigsburg, made the admission at a news conference in Stuttgart, says the New York Times, two weeks after East Germany had accused him of having been a "loyal follower of Hitler."

The East German accusation reached Mr. Schüle in Warsaw where he was sifting captured German documents for new evidence of Nazi crimes. While in Warsaw Mr. Schüle rejected as a "pack of lies" the East German accusations concerning his Nazi past.

At the news conference in Stuttgart, convened by Dr. Wolfgang Haussmann, justice minister of the state of Baden-Wurttemberg, Mr. Schüle contended that he had not known about his party membership until that very week.

"As a student I joined the S. A. [the Sturmabteilung, or Storm Troopers], which I've never denied, but as far as full party membership goes, I considered myself only an applicant since 1937," he said.

Mr. Schüle asserted that a membership book had never been issued to him. Because of this, he said, he believed that he had not been accepted by the party. A certificate from the Allied Documents Center in Berlin, which keeps personal files of millions of party members, has "convinced me of the opposite," he said.

Justice Minister Haussmann declared that Mr. Schüle would continue in his post "because of his proven clean record." The Federal Government also expressed confidence in him.

The prosecutor, who is now fifty-two years old, said that he had never held a post in the Nazi ju-

Worked On Engine Design For Lindbergh's Plane

Herman B. Ring, who played an important part in the design and manufacture of the Wright Whirlwind engine that powered Charles A. Lindbergh's Spirit of St. Louis on the first solo trans-Atlantic flight, died in Trenton, N.J., in St. Francis Hospital after a heart attack, says the New York Times. He was sixty-nine years old. At his death Mr. Ring was president and a director of the Circle F Manufacturing Company in Trenton, makers of electrical wiring devices.

He was a graduate of the Hebrew Technical Institute and Cooper Union, both in New York, and worked at various times for the Taft-Peirce Manufacturing Company, a Rhode Island machinery concern, and as an automotive engineer for Mack Trucks, Inc.

With Charles Lawrence, president of the Lawrence Aero Engine Company, Mr. Ring designed an early rotary air-cooled engine. He became general manager of the Lawrence concern, and as a result of mergers became assistant to the president of the Wright Aeronautical Corporation, now a unit of the Curtiss-Wright Corporation. Wright Aeronautical made the Whirlwind engine.

Soon after the Lindbergh flight in May, 1927, Mr. Ring left the aviation business and purchased the Meteor Electric Company in New York, which he sold in 1928 to the Kenton Manufacturing Company in Brooklyn.

Mr. Ring then retired temporarily to make a trip around the world. In 1931 he joined the Rosfor Knitting Mills, a New York cotton and wool concern, and a

New World Body Set Up To Foster Orthodoxy

A new world body of Orthodox Jewish organizations, to promote the general welfare of historic Judaism, was launched recently in London, in the light of a "great upsurge of deep religiosity" in Western Europe, reports the New York Herald Tribune, according to two leaders of American Jewry, who returned from the organizing convention.

These were Rabbi Israel Miller, president of the Rabbinical Council of America, and Moses I. Feuerstein, president of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America. They led a delegation of twenty Americans, rabbinical and lay, to the international conference, which was attended by more than one hundred world leaders.

The Chief Rabbi of Great Britain, Dr. Israel Brodie, was elected president of the new international body. Other officers, among whom will be some Americans, will be elected at the next meeting in three months, the two spokesmen said.

In a joint statement, Rabbi Miller and Mr. Feuerstein said:

"We are amazed at the vitality and dynamism displayed by the Jewish communities in all parts of Europe. European Jewry, which was decimated and impoverished during World War II and the events preceding it, is beginning to sink new and strong roots. The presence of their leaders at the conference is an indication of their strength and their hopes for the future."

The new world body consists of the Conference of European Rabbis, in association with the Rabbinicial Council of America; the Union of Orthodox Congregations of America; the United Synagogue of Great Britain; the Federation of Synagogues of London; the Consistoire Central des Israelites de France; and Jewish communities of Holland, Belgium, New Zealand and South Africa.

Chief Rabbi Brodie is retiring from his British post at his 70th birthday in June, and will thus be free to supervise the new world body. His successor will probably be elected at that time from among a list of three favored candidates. They are Rabbi Immanuel Jacobovits, of the Fifth Avenue Synagogue, New York; Dr. Yaacov Herzog, former Ambassador from Israel to Canada; and Dr. Louis Rabinowitz, former Chief Rabbi of South Africa.

Israel Needs Law To Keep Out Bad Actors

Israel is to strengthen the legislation adopted in the early emotional days of restored independence which has made the country a haven for Jewish fugitives from justice abroad and for other undesirables, says the London Times. Some British Jews wanted by Scotland Yard have been among those who have turned up in Israel invoking the Law of the Return of 1950 which says that "every Jew has the right to come to this country as an immigrant".

The Nationality Act, passed two years later, accords automatic citizenship to anyone entering the country under the Law of the Return unless he specifically opts out. Dr. J. Goldin-Zahavi, the deputy director-general for immigration and registration in the Ministry of Interior, told the London Times that his office is drafting amendments to both these laws to give the Government a freer hand with undesirables.

At present the only Jews who can lawfully be refused entry are persons "likely to endanger public health or the security of the state" or "with a criminal past which is likely to endanger public peace". The law also provides for the exclusion of any person "acting against the Jewish people", but the Government has never had occasion to invoke that authority.

Hence Jews suffering from mental illnesses which are not contagious may not be excluded and hundreds have in fact been sent to Israel by relatives. Some communities in North African and South American countries have been known to raise money to send Jewish inmates of their mental asylums to Israel.

American Jews appear to have sent the largest proportion of mentally ill relatives, but a United States official familiar with the problem has said they have not

Ex-Nazi Killer, Found Two Years Ago By Jew, Gets Short, Severe Term

Erich Rajakovic, a wartime Austrian SS (Elite Guard) officer and legal aide to Adolf Eichmann in the murder of Jews, was convicted in Vienna of "malicious treatment" of eighty-two Dutch Jews. At his orders they were deported from the Netherlands and later perished in Nazi death camps, reports the New York Times. Rajakovic, now sixty years old, was sentenced to two and a half years in severe confinement following a jury trial.

Both the defense and prosecution appealed the verdict.

Rajakovic was living in Italy as an importer of goods from Communist Eastern Europe when he was denounced two years ago by Simon Wiesenthal, a Viennese private investigator of Nazi war crimes. Rajakovic fled to Austria, hoping to clear his name, but was promptly arrested.

The West German Government conceded at Bonn that unknown Nazi criminals might still be occupying "important posts" in West Germany. That concession, made in a Justice Ministry report on the prosecution of Nazi criminals, says the New York Herald Tribune, was seen as official recognition of the need to extend the statute of limitations on capital crimes committed under the Nazis.

The report, approved by the Cabinet, was compiled as guidance for Parliament in its scheduled debate on whether the twenty-year statute should expire on May 8. Parliament later voted extension.

An original Government decision not to extend the statute of limitations caused widespread criticism at home and abroad. Subsequently, however, the Government indicated its revision of the decision.

According to the Justice Ministry report, most known Nazi crimes have been prosecuted. But it added that the possibility could not be excluded "that unknown crimes and unknown perpetrators, now holding important posts, might be discovered also after May 8."

Bundestag Vote [illegible]al Cut-Off For Nazis Reflects Wish To Close Books On Nazi Era And Avoid More Damage To Reputation

Jewish leaders in Tel Aviv, Berlin and New York expressed disappointment at the decision by the Bundestag to extend the deadline on prosecuting war criminals by only four years and eight months. In Tel Aviv, Dr. Arier Kubovy, chairman of the Yad Veshem Remembrance Authority for Nazi Victims, says the New York Times, called the decision "too little and too late."

Rabbi Joachim Prinz, of New York, said in Berlin that the decision was "a tragedy for the German people." In New York, the American Jewish Committee welcomed the decision but added its regret that a minimum ten-year extension had not been approved.

The West German Parliament voted the shortest suggested extension of the legal deadline for new prosecutions of Nazi war criminals. The Bundestag, or lower house, voted overwhelmingly to prolong the expiration of the statute of limitations for murder during the Hitler regime by four years and eight months to December 31, 1969.

After December 31, 1969 — just twenty years after the fledgling West German republic was granted its first measure of sovereignty by the Allied occupation powers— no new charges may be laid against persons suspected of having committed murder during the Nazi era.

But 14,000 suspects now charged and others discovered during the four years and eight months will remain subject to trial, even after 1969. Immediately after the parliamentary decision, Minister of Justice Ewald Bucher, who had opposed the extension legislation on Constitutional grounds, submitted his resignation to Chancellor Ludwig Erhard.

Sources in Mr. Bucher's Free Democratic party, the junior partner in the Government coalition, said the Minister had written to Dr. Erhard that he could not in good conscience sign a law that he regarded as legalizing punishment of deeds committed before the law had been adopted.

If the bill had not been approved, Nazi criminals not detected before May 8—twenty years after Germany's surrender in World War II—would have been immune from prosecution. Free Democratic sources said that Mr. Bucher's resignation would not threaten Dr. Erhard's governing coalition, reports the New York Times. The party would ask the Chancellor to appoint a non-political Minister of Justice to serve until after the September elections.

The bill, approved on second and final reading was supported by virtually all the Deputies of West Germany's two big parties, the Christian Democratic Union and the Opposition Social Democratic party.

The small Free Democratic party, taking what it calculates to be a politically popular stand in defense of "the rule of law," was joined by a smattering of other Deputies in voting against the legislation.

On the decisive reading 364 Deputies voted for a bill originally proposed by former Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, 94 voted against and four abstained. The bill now goes to the Bundesrat, or upper house, for routine approval and then to President Heinrich Lubke for promulgation as law.

The massive vote for extension masked a bitter behind-the-scenes struggle in the last hours between pragmatic politicians in the chamber and those Deputies who wanted justice to pursue every Nazi murderer unto death. The latter, led by a young Berlin Deputy, Ernst Benda, lost.

Mr. Benda and 49 other Christian Democratic Deputies introduced legislation to extend the statute of limitations on murder by ten years. They hoped this would be coupled with the Adenauer proposal to move the statute's starting date up to 1949, thereby making new prosecutions possible until 1980.

The Justice Committee of the Bundestag reported both bills out. At a meeting of the Christian Democratic Parliamentary group Mr. Benda was advised by Rainer Barzel, the Government floor leader that there would be no majority for his ten-year extension bill, says the New York Times. Party discipline had been lifted for this "question of conscience," but Mr. Barzel's warning was understood.

Public opinion polls have shown that further prosecution of Nazi war criminals has grown unpopular with the West, German voter.

There is widespread sentiment in the country for closing the books on the Nazi era, not out of sympathy for its surviving criminals but primarily out of concern for damage done by current trials to Germany's present reputation.

Mr. Benda could have tried to organize a challenge to his party's leadership and form a majority with the Social Democrats in support of a longer extension. He was not encouraged to do so by Socialist leaders.

At an inter-party caucus the two big parties agreed to call up and support the 1969 extension bill. The only victory for the Benda group was achieved in the excision from the approved legislation of a provision that would have limited new murder prosecutions to "major criminals."

Meanwhile, the session of the trial in Frankfurt of Nazi officials of the Auschwitz concentration camp was marked by two surprise arrests and an admission of personal guilt. The court announced the arrest of Bernhard Lucas, who was a camp doctor, and of Karl Höcker, an SS or elite guard captain and adjutant to the camp commandant.

Coming to Trenton in 1936, Mr. Ring and a group of investors purchased the bankrupt Circle F concern, then a single plant with 150 employees. It now has six plants there, two in Connecticut, and a distribution facility in Los Angeles.

Mr. Ring was active in alumni affairs of the Hebrew Technical Institute and Cooper Union. The new Ring nursery wing of the Jewish Community Center in Trenton was named for him.

Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Reyea Goodman Ring; a daughter, Mrs. Susan Abrams; a son, Edward A. Ring, who is executive vice president of Circle F; two sisters, Mrs. Mae Scharfman, and Mrs. Malca Gampell; and seven grandchildren.

diciary. "I was a soldier from 1938 until 1946, and the best proof of the absurdity of the East German charges is the work I have done here in Ludwigsburg", says the New York Times. Mr. Schüle's agency is a joint operation of the eleven West German states. It has conducted pre-trial investigations in almost 1,000 cases, involving 10,000 accused, since 1958.

Both men, on trial since December, 1963, with eighteen other staff members of the Nazi camp, had been free on bail. Their arrest reduced to three the number of accused who are still allowed to go home after each session.

Wilhelm Boger, one of the most heavily incriminated defendants, admitted for the first time that he had killed prisoners with his own hands.

Boger, chief interrogator at the camp's feared "political department," said that he had once carried out an order for the shooting of two inmates, says the New York Times. Boger, whom numerous witnesses had charged with hundreds of killings and atrocities, contended that he had rejected "successfully" all further killing orders.

The court's decision to arrest Lucas ended a month-long tug-of-war for his detention between the prosecution and the defense. Three weeks ago Lucas admitted that he had taken part in choosing gas-chamber victims.

ISRAEL NEEDS LAW

been unscrupulous but rather influenced by Zionist propaganda depicting Israel as "the mother country" which takes care of Jews in distress. United States policy has been to communicate with the relatives and advise them, says the London Times, to take the mentally ill persons home, and in most cases they have complied.

Dr. Goldin-Zahavi said that one of the measures proposed by his office would amend the Law of the Return to empower the Minister of the Interior to exclude "mentally ill persons endangering public peace or likely to become a burden on the community". Another would change the Nationality Act to make six months' or one year's residence a requirement for the acquisition of citizenship. This amendment would also discourage the phenomena of "fictitious citizens".

"Fictitious citizens", Dr. Goldin-Zahavi explained, are Jews who went to Israel, expressed a desire to settle in accordance with the law, acquired immediate citizenship and then left the country with no intention of returning. This has been done by some Jews living in Latin American countries, Turkey, or the Far East, who for various reasons have been unable to acquire citizenship in their countries of residence.

Israel has been embarrassed by the conduct of some of those people and Dr. Goldin-Zahavi said that his Ministry had been drafting amendments to the passport law which would provide that persons absent abroad for four or five years, says the London Times, might have their passports renewed only for purposes of repatriation.

Everyone agrees that a dining room is the most congenial place to casually meet new friends. In the past, the table you were assigned was the table at which you dined, and four tablemates were the people you knew best when the weekend was over.

In order to make it possible for you to meet more than just one table of new friends, we are introducing Round-Bunny Seating.

THIS MEANS YOU CAN CHANGE YOUR TABLE FOR EVERY MEAL!

What could be friendlier?

Eating 6 Different Meals at 6 Different Tables — Meeting 6 Different Groups of Friends.

Add this new plan to the cocktail and get-together parties, swimming, ice skating, sweetheart tennis tournament, dancing to top bands, complimentary dance class, great entertainment, special late and late, late shows, and many other activities and features, and then you'll know why you're going to have a wonderful time at Grossinger's, April 9 - 11.

WARNING TO THE THIRD GENERATION

historical barriers that separated men from men.

But not only America is changing. Jewry and the Jewish world have changed, too. Your sons and daughters were born into a world in which the old-time Jewish shtetl, where once stood the cradle of their immigrant great-grandfather, lies now in ashes, burnt down by the bloodiest holocaust Jewry had ever experienced. The personal roots that may have grown some minimal kind of contact between fourth-generation American Jewish youngsters and the country of origin of their ancestors were cut down forever.

On the other hand, when your sons and daughters were taken for the first time to kindergarten, a thing had happened in Jewry that unwittingly revolutionized their lives, too: a state was born, a Jewish State! And it is due to the rise and consolidation of the Jewish State — in which, paradoxically, your own generation, the Third Generation of American Jews, had a decisive share — that your offspring, the American Jewish Fourth Generation, has reached a point of no return.

The neat and comfortable thesis of Jewish uniqueness within co-equality in a pluralistic America collapsed beyond repair.

The clever structure of Jewish success in preserving also ethnic identity, where others could maintain only the bonds of religious community, saw its principal pillar — the absence of an ethnic-political Jewish entity outside America, in contra-distinction to the Poles and Italians — shattered to pieces.

Jewish statehood is a reality now, and young American Jews of today, whether they are already aware of it or not, cannot visualize (let alone remember) any other situation but that of co-existence of a political (non-American) Jewish State in the Middle East and of a religious (American) Jewish community in their own state in America.

This situation perforce confronts the Fourth American Jewish Generation (and even more so the generations of American Jews to come) with the very same sense of incongruity that was experienced earlier by Americans of Polish, Italian, and other extraction. Searching for identity outside the original framework of their religio-ethnic or national belonging, Fourth and Later-Generation American Jews will inevitably fall back on the same solutions that molded the process of Americanization of the once-ethnic minorities of Catholic or Protestant persuasion.

To invoke again Herberg's proverbial Poles and Italians — similar to the dissolution of the latter's "Polishness" or "Italianess" in their American religious community, American "Jewishness" will also perforce be reduced to purely religious identification, with no recourse anymore to the specifically Jewish duality which shielded your Third Generation from complete absorption in the non-Jewish environment.

In the face of America's persistent gravitation toward monoculturalism, and considering the inevitably leveling effect of such a trend on a numerically inferior minority — the prospects for the future of American Jewry (and this involves directly half of world Jewry, not to speak of the indirect repercussions on the Jewish communities the world over) are obvious: American Jewry of tomorrow is doomed to complete assimilation!

Am I predicting, then, the utter disappearance of American Jewry within a few generations? Of course not. The lesson of history always points to the survival in the Jewish nation of a minority — people who could not or would not assimilate. However complete and disastrous the assimilation of others this minority persists in spinning on the yarn of historical continuity.

It is no mystery. More often than not it is external pressure rather than "will for national survival" that keeps such a minority from assimilating. But it's there! It is through such a minority in the Jewish people that (historically speaking) the Jewish people survived to this day and will, I believe, live on in the future. Such a minority, too, I expect, will keep on living Jewishly, thinking Jewishly, identifying itself Jewishly in America, even though the bulk of American Jewry will ultimately be lost to us.

It is no mystery, I say — hence the image of that minority will largely depend on you, Third Generation American Jewish leaders returning now from the Congress in Jerusalem, and on us here, in Israel. How large a minority will it be? How strong will it be spiritually and institutionally? What will be its content, its Jewish content, in the chain of Judaism's historical developments?

The answer to these questions will be conditioned by the nature and intensity of Israel-American Jewish collaboration today, tomorrow, through the years. It is for the sake of this minority that we ought to join hands in a supreme intellectual, educational, and practical-cooperative effort. This is not the place to list in detail all fields and branches of such collaboration. But one thing is obvious: you simply cannot do it alone! You cannot solve the problem — your problem — without us and without striking deeper roots in this country of ours.

Our leaders here often appealed to American Jews to come and settle in Israel because we need you. We do. But I believe that the settlement of many of you among us, the forging of all kinds of personal links with us — in short the creation and perpetuation of a living bridge between our communities, is even more important for your own sake and for the sake of the minority through which you will survive and live on in Jewish history.

WARNING TO THE THIRD GENERATION

AN OPEN LETTER TO AMERICAN ZIONISTS FROM AN ISRAELI

By Dr. Zvi Ankori, Jewish History Professor at the Hebrew University, in Jerusalem, and head of its inter-departmental program in general history and the history of the Jewish people. He was Visiting Professor at Columbia University in 1961-63. This article was reprinted in the Jewish Frontier from the Jerusalem Post.

The Zionist Congress has concluded and you, my friends, who came from afar to help make it a success, will be returning to your homes. You feel that real progress was made in devising ways and means for coping with the central problems of Israel and world Jewry today.

But how about your own problem, the problem of your own son and daughter who have now reached college age? How about the problem of the thousands and hundreds of thousands of Jewish college boys and girls who are to assume tomorrow the leadership of American Jewry? How about the hundreds of thousands and the millions who will be the rank and file of American Jewry in the next few years?

Well, you will tell yourselves, things aren't that bad, after all. Of course, there were some danger signals in recent statistics on intermarriage, and you are proud of the candor and frankness with which you discussed this particular ill some time ago.

But there was hope and consolation in other statistics and facts: new communities are rising; new synagogue buildings are being erected; new chairs of Hebrew are being established in American universities; young American Jews are in the forefront of the Negro revolution in the true spirit of prophetic Judaism; and the U.J.A. and Bond Drive are not faltering despite earlier predictions.

Yes, you — the leaders of the crucial "Third Generation" to whom Will Herberg some ten years ago dedicated his brilliant exposé Protestant-Catholic-Jew — are proud of your record. Your generation it was that saw the position of American Judaism assured by the very fact of its being (according to Herberg's thesis) combined on equal footing with the two great "religions of democracy," Protestantism and Catholicism, within the secularist framework of American society. But does this fact automatically carry an assurance for the future?

Permit me to tell you, with all due respect and affection, that you are laboring under a grave delusion. You lull yourselves into believing that Herberg's catchy and extremely inviting characterization of 1940-America keeps on mirroring also the direction of American society in the 1960s. Alas, America of today is no longer the same, nor is present-day Jewry what it was some twenty or even fifteen years ago!

Herberg's fascinating sociological study of the restructuring process that turned the Land of Immigrant-Grandfathers into a Triple Melting Pot of grandsons, and especially his diagnosis of American Jewish reality as it appeared in the second quarter of the 20th century, had for you not only tremendous attraction; it carried (if I may say so, without this being a reflection on the scholarly quality of the work) a great deal of comfort as well.

Viewing America as an intrinsically pluralistic society made up of the three great religious communities, this diagnosis, first of all, handed to modern American Jewry a charter of belonging. It offered both a sense of security, geared in the all-American mechanism of integration, and a sense of strength deriving from the status of collective equality with the Protestants and Catholics of America — a co-equality unaffected by the Jews' numerical inferiority in relation to the other component populations.

On the other hand, this picture of tripartite equilibrium did not do away with the traditional stress on Jewish uniqueness. On the contrary, along with co-equality it kept on emphasizing the persistent duality of the Jewish position in the U.S. Unlike, say, third-generation Poles or Italians, who, as Americans, retained the religion — but not the language, the culture and the way of life — of their immigrant grandfathers and thus caused their "Polishness" or "Italian" background of yesterday to dissolve in their religious community of today, the Jews alone persisted in constituting a community that remained what it always was: both ethnic and religious.

Thus you were left comfortably assured that the (so to speak) built-in Jewish valve operating in the general American mechanism of integration provided adequate protection against the sweeping effects of assimilation.

This continuous duality of the Jewish position was made possible not merely by virtue of the linguistic ambiguity vested in the fact that Jewish religious identity and the Jewish ethnic group are coterminous (as pointed out by Herberg). It surely goes back to the much more basic politico-historic difference in background which made the Jews form and be looked upon as a category apart from the other immigrant groups whose ancestors created modern America.

To continue the above example — the third-generation Poles and Italians found it incongruous, as Americans, to cultivate a separate ethnic identity, synonymous as it was perforce with political (and not merely historical and cultural) attachment to their forefathers' country of origin — that is, to the present-day Polish or Italian state, as the case may be.

Not so, the Jews. There was no separate and well-defined political Jewish entity to claim their allegiance outside of their obvious loyalty to the U.S. or to confront them with the necessity of making clear-cut choices and assertions.

Hence, American Jews (with the exception of a fringe group obsessed the "dual loyalty" complex to the point of self-effacement) could without difficulty fall back on the abundant resources of Jewish historical memory and of world-wide Jewish unity. This they did with great profit to themselves no less than to world Jewry.

Having thus deepened and enriched the content of their religious and ethnic consciousness, they were prepared in the Third Generation "to return" to their roots, without considering such Jewish reassertion detrimental to, or incompatible with, their sense of belonging to pluralistic America.

You are this Third Generation. While undergoing, along with other ethnic immigrant groups, a process of far-reaching changes from within that molded you into an American religious community, on a par with the two other American religious communities, you not only preserved your "Jewishness" but actually enhanced it as compared to your predecessors. In an upsurge of revived historical and cultural interest (I refrain from calling it "spiritual revival") you reached out not so much for the Yiddish of two generations ago and its East European literary climate, as for the Hebrew and the Hebrew creations of more distant chapters of our history.

Correspondingly, in the field of practical action you not only shouldered the traditional philanthropic tasks of helping less fortunate Jewries the world over, but threw your political and financial weight behind Zionism's successful struggle for international recognition. It was, indeed, thanks to your support and firm backing that the post-war world espoused our claim and struggle for the Jews' right to a state of their own — a state, that is, for Jews who need it and Jews who want it.

This situation has now irretrievably changed. Your sons and daughters — those hundreds of thousands of Jewish youths who are now 18 and 19 and 20, and those who last November marched for the first time in their life past the ballot-box of their district — constitute already the Fourth Generation of American Jewry.

Theirs is a different America. The America they know from school and street, from the baseball-stadium and television, from life and from literature, is less and less pluralistic and more and more monocultural. Not that there occurred any conscious or intentional departure from the ideology of pluralism.

Our Western civilization as a whole, of which America is nowadays the leader and the main exponent (in many more ways than the political), moves at an ever-faster pace toward monoculturalism, busy as it is with obliterating age-old divisions and with felling

J.D.C. SENDS 665,000 POUNDS OF PASSOVER SUPPLIES TO EUROPE

The Joint Distribution Committee has shipped more than 665,000 pounds of matzoth and other Passover supplies to ten countries in Europe to enable needy Jews to observe the holiday properly, it was announced by Edward M. M. Warburg, JDC chairman. This is the greatest amount sent since 1951 when JDC shipped 690,000 pounds of Passover supplies to Europe. In 1964 JDC sent over 370,000 pounds to the nine European countries.

Passover starts this year on the evening of Friday, April 16. Funds for Passover relief and other JDC welfare and rehabilitation programs are provided mainly by the campaigns of the United Jewish Appeal.

The Passover supplies include 640,000 pounds of matzoh; 25,000 pounds of matzoh meal, and 1,800 bottles of Passover wine. France, which is still heavily burdened by refugee problems, is receiving almost 125,000 pounds of Passover supplies. In addition to providing Passover supplies to needy Jewish communities of Europe, JDC has made special grants to enable needy Jews of Algeria, Iran, Morocco, and Tunisia to purchase matzoh and other Passover supplies locally.

In Poland, matzoh is baked by the religious community with equipment provided by JDC. Here also needy Jews are provided with funds to buy matzoh and other supplies produced locally.
